

Thring Townsend Lee & Pembertons Case Study

Thring Townsend Lee & Pembertons has enjoyed a long history of successful law practice over several hundred years. It was first established in the West of England and, as the firm continued to build its national reputation in local markets, it successfully completed a merger with the Bristol branch of Laytons Solicitors in September 2005. With offices already based in Bath and Swindon, the developing regional centre of Bristol was a natural choice to locate the Western end of the firm; counterbalancing the firm's growth along the M4 corridor to London.

The Bristol office has continued to develop offering a wide range of legal services, including Pensions, Debt Collection, Insolvency, Banking, Intellectual Property, Employment, Family, Commercial Litigation and Construction. Recruitment has been buoyant in Bristol, which has become a natural magnet for qualified professionals in search of a better work / life balance based upon the City's status as a major regional centre with excellent transport links, including an international airport.

As a result of further growth plans, Thring Townsend Lee & Pembertons has recently relocated the Bristol office to a larger space at the Paragon in Victoria Street, which is an exciting development by Bristol based company, Cubex Land. This new office is a further sign of the firm's commitment to Bristol and to the future. Managing Partner, Thomas Sheppard, states that:

“This new home in the heart of Bristol not only allows room for our continued expansion, but it also matches our aspirations for the future and meets our business needs.”
